

Cinder

Fresh roast. Slow mornings.

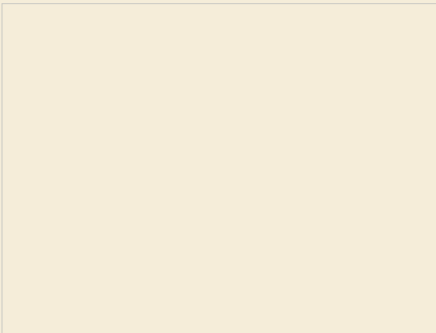

A small-batch coffee storefront for discovering seasonal beans, choosing a grind, and finding a comfortable brewing and delivery rhythm.

A small ember above the hearth line represents roasting heat and the quiet warmth of a daily coffee ritual.

An oversized physically photographed coffee pouch on a brick field, opposing-corner product typography and tasting facts, three coherent paper packages, a hard-edged grind/order strip, batch ledger, coffee-cherry study, and a kitchen-counter brewing sheet.

A voice for Cinder

Cinder opens as a roastery package poster, with an oversized tactile coffee pouch at the centre and origin and tasting notes in opposing corners. Cream, kraft, and olive packages give three roasts their own material character against a brick field. A compact order strip puts grind, quantity, and price directly beneath the coffee. The original ember symbol and Grindela typography connect the storefront to the warmth of roasting. A batch ledger makes process and altitude easy to compare, followed by a coffee-cherry photograph and a practical brewing sheet. Visitors can build a basket and save a delivery rhythm while keeping the ritual of the everyday cup in view.
