Good work finds its rhythm.

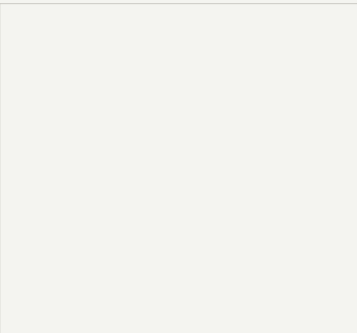

A collaborative project workspace that gives small creative teams a clear view of their priorities, progress, and shared responsibilities.

An orbital path and central point represent individual contributions moving around one shared purpose.

A modern studio cockpit with a quiet navigation rail, dominant saturated week roadmap, one continuous project-allocation strip, compact working ledger, human workload rows, and a paper task drawer with violet controls. Manrope headings and precise DM Sans labels sit on warm gray and white.

A voice for orbit

Orbit brings a small creative team’s work into one considered studio dashboard. A broad week roadmap gives research, design, content, and review their own saturated stage colors, while a continuous allocation strip connects planned hours to the actual project. Compact task rows keep owners, deadlines, checklists, and progress close together. Team workload and a timed review agenda give the work a human rhythm without overwhelming the main view. A task drawer with violet controls opens the next useful decision: change a status, complete a step, or keep a working note. Quiet paper, precise typography, and clear contrast make the shared plan easy to read on a desktop or a phone.
