

FORMA

Space, shaped by living.

An architecture practice creating quiet, enduring spaces through material honesty and close attention to the way people live.

An open, nested architectural volume represents the dialogue between structure and the lives it holds.

A voice for FORMA

Forma presents architecture through the spaces themselves. A large framed photograph opens beside a narrow project archive, giving each interior room to speak before the studio describes its approach. Selecting a project changes its image, facts, material palette, and spatial study. The page then follows the scale of a physical dossier: a measured plan, a broad detail photograph, a smaller material crop, and quiet practice notes. Paper, charcoal, hairline rules, and compact technical labels recall an architect’s presentation board. The nested volume symbol expresses the relationship between structure and the lives it holds.
