A compact navy issue rail, four unequal photographic story columns on off-white paper, The Foriene headlines, quiet credits, long visual essays, and ruled exhibition notes.

A voice for Monograph

Monograph is an independent journal for curious eyes. A narrow gallery-blue index accompanies a living wall of photographs, essays, and studio observations on warm paper. Four unequal columns create a reading rhythm of their own: a long exhibition view, a floating colour study, a sculptural detail, and a small record of work. Delicate serif headlines and precise publishing notes keep the imagery in focus. Readers can change the issue, explore subjects, open a longer essay, and keep a personal reading list. Below the wall, exhibition archives and a printed edition invite a slower encounter with art, objects, and the spaces between them.
